The Narrowing Gate

by Jean Allen

Last week I spoke of the critical importance of mercy and forgiveness. I wonder whether right between those two words is where the narrow gate resides.

We all know how narrow that gate can become when we are hurting and angry. The last thing we want to do is forgive and we make choices over and over again to hold the resentment and feed our anger because we are right and they are wrong.

The longer we refuse to forgive, the narrower that gate becomes.

But still we say, "Lord, Lord! We ate and drank with you. You taught us in our churches." In the Gospel, Christ was not being high handed and snarky when he said, "I do not know where you come from." Those who refuse to forgive have chosen to remain outside the narrow gate. If we don't forgive and choose not to give mercy, we are choosing to live in a world that is not the Kingdom. Outside that gate, it doesn't matter if one has all the right words. If our mouths are also spewing resentment and violence towards those who hurt us, we are not Kingdom residents. We have chosen to live outside the gate. We are not victims without recourse. You never know, in the end, you may watch the person or people you have refused to forgive enter freely into the Kingdom while you find the gate too narrow and the squeeze too tight. The last one you think is worthy of the Kingdom may be one of the first to enter in.

Of course, if we choose to at least try to forgive and try to dispense mercy instead of vitriol, the gate widens immediately. We can peek through and tentatively say, "Lord?" and he will immediately respond,

"There you are! I was looking for you. Welcome home!"
